

The rushing water and lively water are able to enhance the surroundings of Pennsylvania. Within the beauty, there are soaring birds, trees, strong and vivid. The birds need oxygen and water, and more importantly, clean water. This combined fish is a color of dark, contrasting green as if symbolizing the vibrant nature of the forest's trees. On its body, water can be seen, with a gradient of bluish-orange red. The sunlight beaming on the sparkling water, of what reflects the strength of Pennsylvania.

As winter arrives, the surface of the lively water comes to a halt, forming into a layer of ice. The birds need to then remain trapped in the depths of the water, unable to jump. As time ticks its way to the moment spring blossoms, the water returns to its rapid flow. The birds can finally leap into the air as if wanting to feel the sense of freedom, the atmosphere of Pennsylvania. Within this world, we people also dance, jump, and survive. Within our own handholds of ice, suppressing our emotions, imprisoning ourselves in our thoughts. Even so, we must learn to live with patience, and persistence. Finally, as these handholds start to melt away, we're also able to jump, shatter that handhold, feel exhilarating and alive.

Like a break trout, like a Pennsylvania, we jump and break free.
