The northern cardinal eats mostly insects, berries and seeds. It has blueberries and soft fruit seeds very much. Their beaks are especially good at cracking seedshells to eat them. Cardinals can be eaten by cats, dogs, hawks and owls. The eggs are often for snakes. If a predator comes near the nest, cardinals will sing a chirping song and sometimes fly toward the predator to scare it away.

Sometimes we see a cardinal in my backyard and think they are very pretty and have a pretty song. I would be sad if I couldn't see cardinals anymore because they are people appreciate them more.
