

James H. H. H.

1st grade

Room #7, John S. Smith Elementary, Wilpitts

The painted bunting is often described as the most beautiful bird in North America. It has been nicknamed nonparcil, which means without equal. The painted bunting is found in thickets, woodland edges with riparian thickets, shrubbery, and brushy areas. Painted Buntings are shy, secretive, and often difficult to observe, but they can be fairly approachable where they are habituated to bird feeders. Painted Buntings regularly feed on seeds of grasses.