

Once
A jet bird,
Northern Cardinal
Now flies freely in the Sky of United States of America Chewer-a-choo, chewer-a-dite-dite Feeding on gems, insects, and fruits, I show up in clouds, grasslands, and maybe your backyard Showing red and yellow pigments from its diet, Its feathers, bright red, like burning fire, reveals the passion of its, the track mark, around its beak, like the burning coal underneath the furnace. Illustrates its strength purdle, purdle, purdle, purdle, purdle...what, what, what, what, what Facing Feltors, feelings, facts, awareness that run its red, break its eggs, and eat its offspring, the bird continues to sing, to warm And to wait in its own way. Facing the dropping temperature, a Challenge from mother nature, it drops its own body warmth to survive
I show down its metabolism but never what cheer what cheer, what cheer, what cheer what what, what, what, what
what what, what, what
what
what what, what
